OB ISSUES

If we have to cut an episiotomy for delivery, we will first cut anterior (upwards) and then if more room is needed cut posterior (downwards)

If we need to make an anterior episiotomy :do they want it reapproximated? Yes____ No____
:do they want it left open? Yes____ No____

Do they understand that if we reapproximate it, this might promote further scar tissue and contributes to difficulties with coitus, menstruation, and urination? Yes____ No____

Do they agree to a posterior cut (if needed)? Yes____ No____

If they insist, we can get the needed room for delivery with mediolateral episiotomy but they need to understand there is a large risk of hemorrhage and increased pain with healing. Also it can still tear into the rectum. Any tears into the rectum would be repaired.

If the baby has fetal distress during labor will they accept an emergency c-section to save the baby? If not why and do they understand the baby may die? Yes____ No____

If their labor does not progress and the baby is not delivering after the time we expected delivery to occur will they accept a routine c-section? If not, why? Yes____ No____
